UCLA Health’s community expansion has brought more than 180 primary and specialty care offices to greater Los Angeles. Recently, the entire system has become more convenient, as popular specialties and services, such as obstetrics & gynecology, pediatrics and general surgery, have opened new locations, and the number of offices offering evening and weekend hours has increased.

More Options for Expectant Mothers and Children

We recently opened or expanded several OB/GYN and pediatrics offices outside of Westwood and Santa Monica, often in tandem. Both OB/GYN and pediatrics offices are now open in Torrance and Westlake Village, and general pediatrics offices are located in Calabasas and Pasadena, where OB/GYN offices will open soon, too. Physicians deliver babies and perform procedures in nearby community hospitals, and pediatric specialists rotate through some of these practices.

Offering OB/GYN and pediatrics services in the same communities is both convenient for patients and improves the quality and the continuity of their care. It means that pregnant women can select a pediatrics provider and go in for a prenatal appointment without having to travel far from home, and that after delivery, they can easily keep the entire family’s medical care and electronic health records in one place.

Surgical Consults Available in Community Offices

Another type of expansion that offers convenience to patients has been to move general and specialty surgeons into community practices. In the new surgical consult suites in Santa Clarita and Encino, surgeons provide consultations for hernia repair, colon resection, cyst removal and more. They perform surgeries at nearby outpatient surgery centers and community hospitals.

Immediate Care Near You

Finally, we have made it easier for UCLA Health patients to receive medical care when and where they need it. While patients should always call their primary care office first if they are sick or injured, if that office is closed, our six immediate care locations accept walk-in visits during evening and weekend hours, billed as regular doctor’s appointments.

Throughout this expansion, our goal remains the same: to ensure that every UCLA Health patient receives the care they need, when and where they need it, at every age and stage of life.
Here’s to an exciting year ahead

Johnese Spisso, President, UCLA Health

In 2019, UCLA Health opened or expanded dozens of community practices in the greater Los Angeles region. We also improved care coordination for high- and rising-risk patients, expanded our telehealth offerings, and launched direct scheduling and opt-in appointment reminders via text through myUCLAHealth, our online patient portal.

Looking ahead, 2020 will be another year of great growth. Here are some of the things I’m most excited about:

Downtown L.A. office set to open
We’ve spent well over a year preparing to open a brand new office in downtown Los Angeles at the corner of West 7th Street and Flower Street, in the complex known as The Bloc. The office will offer primary care for children and adults, as well as hematology/oncology, surgery consultations and imaging services. Look for this new addition in March.

Calabasas expansion continues
The Calabasas office opened earlier this year, offering ophthalmology, lab services, general and specialty pediatrics, and primary care services for entertainment industry patients. Looking ahead, we’ll add obstetrics & gynecology, urology, head and neck surgery, and an imaging and interventional center in the same building.

More convenient offerings
One of the things I’m most excited about is our continued commitment to providing care to UCLA Health patients when and where they need it. This means adding more same day visits to primary care practices, opening additional immediate care locations with extended hours, embedding more OB/GYN, pediatrics and general surgery practices into the community setting, and hiring more inpatient physicians to work in community hospitals.

As we welcome 2020, here’s to more growth and a healthy year ahead.

Preventive Care

Stay healthy at any age

Your primary care physician should always discuss preventive health and the importance of vaccines, disease screenings and cancer screenings with you at your annual wellness visit. The following are six preventive health items you should know about, and when most people should have them done.

Keep in mind that all of this information is subject to change given your medical history and personal risk factors. Let your primary care physician know if you have any questions.

Three days after delivering at Ronald Reagan UCLA Medical Center, Brittani Clark, a pediatric nurse practitioner, brought in her newborn daughter, Nia, for her first appointment with Dr. Allison Guimera in the Porter Ranch office. Dr. Guimera weighed and examined Nia and talked to Brittani about infant care. Similar well child visits continued at regular intervals until Nia was about 2 months old.

Then, right before Thanksgiving, Brittani says Nia vomited several times after her evening feedings. Brittani called the pediatrics office and spoke to an on-call physician, who told her to bring in Nia the next day if her symptoms continued.

While Nia wasn’t vomiting the next morning, Brittani noticed that her diaper was lighter than usual. Dr. Guimera saw Nia that day, and was concerned enough about her symptoms to order an urgent ultrasound, which was performed at UCLA’s Santa Clarita imaging center.

Afterward, the radiologist called Dr. Guimera to tell her that the study indicated pyloric stenosis, a condition in which a valve between the stomach and the small intestine blocks food from moving through the digestive tract. The recommended treatment is surgery.

Dr. Guimera called Brittani and told her the diagnosis. She then asked her to bring Nia to UCLA Medical Center, Santa Monica, where she could be directly admitted and have the procedure within 24 hours. The surgery was successful, and after Nia was discharged, Dr. Guimera monitored her to make sure she was healthy and gaining weight.

The office again coordinated Nia’s care when she was 7 months old and needed to see a pediatric neurologist. When Dr. Guimera wasn’t available, her colleague, Dr. Militello, stepped in to handle the referral and check on Nia after she was admitted to the hospital.

In both cases, Brittani says, the entire system worked well. “Dr. Guimera and the Porter Ranch office were easy to reach and ready to coordinate Nia’s care,” she says, “and the hospital team explained everything so that even family members without a medical background could understand what was going on.”

Since then, Dr. Guimera has continued to see Nia for well visits. At her recent 1-year-old checkup, Nia smiled and gave her doctor a high-five.

“I want families to think of me as the leader of their child’s health care team.”
WHERE TO FIND PRIMARY CARE FOR KIDS

UCAL HEALTH PROVIDES PRIMARY care services to children at more than 25 locations throughout greater Los Angeles.

Physicians trained in pediatrics deliver this care in about 20 offices, while family medicine physicians see kids in a handful of additional locations. All of these doctors provide primary care to children of all ages, from newborns through adolescents.

To make this care more convenient for families with children, many pediatric specialists now spend some time in community offices. For instance, pediatric surgeons now rotate through the Torrance and Santa Clarita offices; pediatric neurologists and gastroenterologists and pulmonologists spend time in Calabasas.

The adjacent list and below map show the UCLA Health offices that offer primary care services to kids.
