WOMEN'S HEALTH & MONEY @ WORK™

Women's Health & Money @ Work™ helps low- to-moderate-income women attain better health and economic and financial security through educational and coaching programs on healthy eating, active living, and money management held at worksites, job training centers, WorkSource Centers, and community agencies. The goal is for women to learn to balance their health and financial challenges on and off the job.

Parents of Magnolia Elementary School students receive their certificates of completion for the Women's Health & Money @ Work™ program.

"I have enjoyed participating in the work-site classes because they have motivated me and encouraged me to keep on practicing a healthy life style, like eating a clean diet and exercising every day. Ten years ago, I started to take care of myself more and with time have lost 40 pounds. It makes me happy to be able to maintain this change for such a long time."

"I have been reminded of the importance of savings, a habit I practice in my day-to-day life. I like that we learn something new in every class—like finding opportunities to save more money—and that I get to share the information with my daughters so that they could apply it to their personal life."

"I feel that as you get older, you have to make the effort to take care of yourself so that you can have a happy life."
